First Lieutenant Will R. Clack, , Corps of Engineers, United States Army, 127th Engineer Battalion (Airborne Division), distinguished himself by heroism on Grosse Waxenstein Mountain, Garmisch, Germany, on 25 August 1957. When a member of a four-man party on a mountain climbing trip became separated from the the group, Lieutenant Clack made immediate preparations to take a rope up to the isolated man. Suddenly, upon hearing the sound of falling rocks, Lieutenant Clack looked up and saw his comrade bouncing and rolling down the side of the mountain. Without thought of his own safety, Lieutenant Clack ran full speed down the mountain and with his body stopped the falling man just inches short of a sheer drop of 100 to 150 feet. Lieutenant Clack, as an experienced climber, was acutely aware of the possible danger involved; yet willingly risked his own life in an attempt to save that of a fellow officer. In performing this brave action, Lieutenant Clack displayed a rare courage and spirit of self-sacrifice which reflect great credit on himself and the military service.

Private First Class Donald L. Galbreath, , United States Army, a member of United States Army Garrison, Fort MacArthur, California, distinguished himself by heroism on 21 October 1957, at Whites Point in San Pedro, California. While on an assignment to take publicity pictures of a fellow soldier in skin diving gear for the Fort MacArthur Newspaper he saw his comrade, whose agua lung had become damaged, surface about one hundred yards from shore and call for help. Without hesitation and with complete disregard for his personal safety, Private Galbreath entered the water fully clothed and swam out to recover the man who had submerged twice before being reached. Although he was fighting the underwater current himself, he was able to pull the victim close to the shore where they were washed into the rocks. Private Galbreath suffered cuts on his legs and feet which necessitated hospitalization for several weeks. Private Galbreath's alert, prompt action reflects great credit on himself and the military service.

Sergeant Vernon A. Gusch, , Military Police Corps, United States Army, a member of the 540th Military Police Company (Svc), distinguished himself by heroism at Coco Solito, Canal Zone, on 7 November 1957. While standing in front of Coco Solito Fire Station, observing the effects of a torrential rainfall which had totalled 10.7 inches in a twenty-four-hour period, Sergeant Gasch saw a small girl fall into the raging waters of an overflowed drainage ditch and disappear. Although unable to swim himself and with complete disregard for his own safety, Sergeant Gasch Jumped into the turbulent, unfamiliar, murky waters, estimated at seven and one-half feet in depth and located the child. Unable to keep his own head above the water, he managed to hold the child's head above the water and at the same time work his way through the accumulated debris and heavy current to the side of the ditch where he lifted the child to Sergeant Gasch, at the risk of his own life, undoubtedly prevented serious injury and possible death to the child, reflecting great credit on himself and the military service.

Sergeant Leo R. Miller, , United States Army, formerly a member of the Military Police Detachment, United States Army Garrison (8031), Camp Kobe, Japan, distinguished himself by heroism near Pier No. 6, Kobe Port, Kobe, Japan, on 30 October 1956. Arriving at the scene where attempts were in progress to locate a United States seaman reported to have fallen from the pier, Sergeant Miller, without hesitation and at great personal hazard, immediately entered the water to search for the missing man. Hampered by darkness, driving rain, extreme cold, and heavy seas, Sergeant Miller dived repeatedly in the daugerous area of the slip between Pier No. 6 East and Pier No. 6 West, remaining in the water approximately twenty minutes without success. As hope of rescue was about to be abandoned, the unconscious sailor was sighted; then, despite the presence of rescue parties at the scene, Sergeant Miller again entered the water. At great risk of being crushed between a small boat launched from an aircraft carrier and the solid walls of the pier by the force of high running choppy seas, Sergeant Miller held the helpless victim's head above water until the rescue party arrived with a boat. When the seaman had been placed in the boat Sergeant Miller climbed back on the pier and assisted in hauling him up to the pier level by rope. As a result of Sergeant Miller's valorous actions the life of a United States seaman was saved. Sergeant Miller's exemplary courage and outstanding determination, displayed throughout the performance of this rescue, reflect the utmost credit on himself and the military service.

Master Sergeant Joseph Villeyas, , Infantry, United States Army, Company B, 47th Infantry Regiment, 9th Infantry Division, Fort Carson, Colorado, distinguished himself by heroism on 12 June 1957. While acting as safety noncommissioned officer on Range No. 38 for a unit undergoing live hand grounde training, Sergeant Villegas was faced with a sudden crisis which demanded immediate and spontaneous action to avert possible loss of life to himself and a trainee. With complete disregard for his own personal safety, he wrested an active live grenade from the hands of the trainee frozen with fright and, after throwing the armed grenade into the impact area where it exploded immediately, physically forced the trainee into a safe prone position. Sergeant Villegas' quick judgment and courageous action saved the lives of two men, reflecting the utmost credit on himself and the military service.

Specialist Third Class Thomas D. Walsh, , Transportation Corps. United States Army, a member of the 11th Transportation Company (Light Helicopter), distinguished himself by heroism at Gausta Mountain, Norway, on 12 August 1957. While crew chief of an H-34 Army helicopter hauling sling loads to the top of Gausta Mountain, Specialist Walsh observed the crash of another H-34 helicopter on the side of the mountain. The helicopter of which Specialist Walsh was crew chief flew immediately to the scene of the burning wreckage and hovered approximately 10 feet in the air above the burning wreckage on the steep rock-strewn slope. Without regard for his personal safety, Specialist Walsh jumped from the hovering aircraft, ran to the flaming wreckage and sprayed the cockpit with a fire extinguisher to keep the flames away from the unconscious pilot. After quickly removing the pilot from the wreckinge, Specialist Walsh carried him to a safe position. The prompt and courageous actions taken by Specialist Walsh undoubtedly saved the pilot's life, reflecting the utmost credit on himself and the military service.
