V..SOLDIER'S MEDAL. By direction of the President, under the provisions of the Act of Congress, approved 2 July 1926, a Soldier's Medal for heroism not involving actual conflict with an enemy is awarded to:

Specialist Four Joseph F. Bandy, , Transportation Corps, Army of the United States, a member of the Transportation Service Company, United States Army Supply and Maintenance Center, Alaska, distinguished himself by heroism on 13 June 1959. While on a camping trip near Palmer, Alaska, Specialist Bandy observed a car rolling backward into Falk Lake with a woman running and screaming for help alongside it. The woman slipped and fell, and the car plunged uncontrolled into deep water and sank almost out of sight with two small children inside. Without hesitation or concern for his own personal safety, and despite the danger of possibly being pulled under by the sunken automobile, Specialist Bandy jumped fully clad into the lake, swam out to the submerged car, dived below the surface of the water and, together with a fellow soldier, rescued the two children and brought them safely to shore to their mother. The quick action, personal resourcefulness and unselfish courage displayed by Specialist Bandy in this sudden emergency are worthy of emulation, and reflect distinct credit on himself and the military service.

Major Letcher Crawford, Infantry, Army of the United States, distinguished himself by heroism at the Mountain Ranger Camp, Dahlonega, Georgia on 21 May 1959. While participating as an observer in an airlanded Ranger patrol operation, Major Crawford was a passenger in a helicopter which crashed immediately after takeoff. Despite the fact that he was the most seriously injured of all passengers, he assumed immediate control as senior officer aboard and, without hesitation or concern for his own personal safety, successfully evacuated all passengers from the wrecked helicopter. In constant danger of possible explosion and fire, his high sense of duty and unselfish regard for his fellow men insured that all other passengers were out of the aircraft prior to moving himself from an extremely perilous position. It was only after he had cleared the crash area that he realized that he himself was injured. Major Crawford's prompt, courageous actions and presence of mind in this sudden emergency are worthy of emulation, and reflect distinct credit on himself and the military service.

Specialist Four Kenneth W. Hohe, United States Army, a member of Medical Detachment, United States Army Hospital, Asmara, Eritrea, Ethiopia, distinguished himself by heroism on 15 June 1959. Specialist Hohe was a passenger in a jeep carrying United States Mail and following another vehicle over a rugged and winding mountainous road from Massawa to Asmara, Eritrea. As the leading vehicle rounded a curve, five road bandits armed with rifles stopped it, forced the passengers to dismount and searched and relieved them of personal items. The jeep rounded the bend shortly thereafter and, spotting the bandits and quickly realizing the precarious position, the members of the second party stopped approximately 75 feet from the lead vehicle. When the bandits approached the jeep, the driver raised and fired his pistol, hitting the nearest bandit in the abdomen and knocking him to the ground. Without hesitation or concern for his own personal safety, Specialist Hohe drew his pistol and began firing at the remaining bandits who, after attempting to return the fire, fled over the retaining wall by the roadside. Specialist Hohe's prompt response and presence of mind aided in repelling the bandits, prevented the loss of United States Government property and Mail and saved the party from the vicious action of bandits known in this area by their ruthless activity. His courageous efforts in this dangerous situation are worthy of emulation, and reflect distinct credit on himself and the military service.

Specialist Four Fred E. Jude, Artillery, Army of the United States, Headquarters and Headquarters Battery, 2d Guided Missile Battalion, 1st Guided Missile Group, distinguished himself by heroism on 26 September 1959 at Fort Bliss, Texas. Eight busses were loaded and about to depart for Noel Field where personnel were detailed to participate in a parade when fire was discovered in one of the vehicles. Almost immediately and before anyone could get off, the bus was filled with dense black smoke and flames. Without thought of danger to himself and despite the smoke and increasing flames, Specialist Jude stayed on the bus, calming and helping the panicked men to safety. He emerged from the burning interior of the bus for a breath of fresh air and, without hesitation or regard for his own personal safety, Specialist Jude reentered the burning bus to search for anyone who might still be on the bus. Feeling his way through the aisle of the bus, he found one soldier in a semiconscious or confused condition with his boot caught on an unidentified object. Immediately realizing that the man would perish in the flames if not removed immediately, Specialist Jude pulled him with such force as to break the nylon boot laces and removed the victim to a safe distance from the burning bus. Specialist Jude performed these heroic actions in the face of constant danger of an explosion of the 75 gallons of gasoline in the fuel tank. The prompt courage and determination displayed by Specialist Jude in unselfishly and voluntarily risking his life in the emergency undoubtedly saved the man's life. Specialist Jude's actions are in keeping with the highest traditions of the United States Army, and reflect great credit on himself and the military service.

Sergeant Charles H. Lembke, , a member of Headquarters Battery, 7th Infantry Division Artillery, distinguished himself by heroism on 11 June 1959. Sergeant Lembke was in the process of coupling a 2½-ton truck and a radar tracker when the tracker moved forward and threatened to crush a Korean soldier assisting him in this duty. Quickly realizing that the Korean soldier was frozen with fear and unable to move, Sergeant Lembke immediately jumped over the tongue of the tracker mount and, without concern for his own personal safety, pushed the dazed man free of the closing vehicles. In performing his heroic action, Sergeant Lembke was caught between the two heavy vehicles and received severe bruises and lacerations about the chest. His courageous efforts saved the Korean soldier from death by preventing him from being crushed around the face and head. The unselfish concern, fearlessness, and quick presence of mind displayed by Sergeant Lembke in this sudden emergency are worthy of emulation, and reflect distinct credit on himself and the military service.

Sergeant Howard R. Petroff, , United States Army, a member of Company A, 2d Medium Tank Battalion (Patton), 85th Armor, 2d Armored Division, distinguished himself by heroism on 10 September 1959 at Fort Hood, Texas. Sergeant Petroff was performing duty as Instructor-Coach and engaged in instructing personnel in handling live M-26 fragmentary hand grenades when a trainee under his instruction executed a toss which sent an activated grenade straight into the air and back to the edge of the throwing pit. Realizing the immediate danger involved, Sergeant Petroff quickly shouted a warning to all personnel in the area, leaped forward and swept the live grenade out into the impact area, pushed the trainee into the grenade sump and fell over him just as the grenade exploded approximately four feet from the edge of the pit. The quick presence of mind, prompt heroic actions and unselfish courage displayed by Sergeant Petroff in this sudden emergency saved his fellow soldier from death or serious injury, and reflect the utmost credit on himself and the military service.

First Lieutenant James M. Tucker, , Infantry, United States Army, distinguished himself by heroism at the Mountain Ranger Camp, Dahlenega, Georgia, on 21 May 1959. While acting as Observer-Instructor for an airlanded Ranger patrol operation, Lieutenant Tucker saw a helicopter crash immediately after takeoff and, without hesitation or concern for his own personal safety and despite the constant possibility of an explosion or fire, voluntarily entered the wreckage in an effort to rescue any occupants who might have been trapped inside the crashed aircraft. Even though the aircraft fuel tanks were destroyed and a vast amount of gasoline was in the crash area, he remained inside the wrecked helicopter until he was certain that all passengers had been evacuated to safety. Lieutenant Tucker's unselfish determination and courageous action in risking his life in this hazardous situation are worthy of emulation, and reflect distinct credit on himself and the military service.

Specialist Four John E. Wolfe, , Adjutant General's Corps, United States Army, a member of Headquarters Company, United States Army Supply and Maintenance Center, Alaska, distinguished himself by heroism on 18 June 1959. While on a camping trip near Palmer, Alaska, Specialist Wolfe observed a car rolling backward into Falk Lake with a woman running and screaming for help alongside of it. The woman slipped and fell, and the car plunged uncontrolled into deep water and sank almost out of sight with her two small children inside. Without hesitation or concern for his own personal safety, and despite the danger of possibly being pulled under by the sunken automobile, Specialist Wolfe jumped fully clad into the lake, swam out to the submerged car, dived below the surface of the water, opened a door and, together with a fellow soldier, rescued the two children and brought them safely to shore to their mother. After ascertaining that no one else was inside the automobile, he drove the woman and her two small children to the hospital in Palmer and then returned them to their home. The quick action, personal resourcefulness and unselfish courage displayed by Specialist Wolfe in this sudden emergency are worthy of emulation, and reflect distinct credit on himself and the military service.
