, United States Marine Corps, a First Lieutenant Robert S. Brown, Jr., member of Headquarters, Camp Smedley I). Butler, Okinawa, distinguished himself by heroism on 4 May 1961. When an Army HU-1A Helicopter crashed and burst into flames in the vicinity of Camp Smedley D. Butler, Lieutenant Brown, together with two enlisted members of the United States Marine Corps, proceeded immediately to the scene and commenced rescue operations. Without regard for his own personal safety, and in the face of intense heat and flames, he persisted in his efforts until the successful rescue of Army and Marine personnel trapped in the burning aircraft was accomplished. Handicapped by the lack of both rescue equipment and experience, and working strenuously under the constant threat of an explosion of the fuel tank, his courageous action and outstanding presence of mind undoubtedly saved the lives of the Army pilot and crew member of the crashed helicopter. Lieutenant Brown's bold and heroic actions in this emergency are worthy of emulation, and reflect the utmost credit on himself and the military service.

Sergeant Clarence M. Denn, Jr., , United States Army, a member of Headquarters Company, 13th United States Army Field Station, distinguished himself by heroism at the Royal Navy Wireless Station, Forrest Moor, Harrogate, Yorkshire, England, on 5 November 1960. Sergeant Denn was standing near a group of American spectators at a fireworks display when one of the rockets accidentally fired into the group, seriously injuring one of the individuals. Without hesitation or concern for his own personal safety, Sergeant Denn moved quickly, picked up the loose rocket with his bare hands, and threw it into the air where it instantly exploded. During this act, he suffered severe burns to his hand and forearm. His prompt, courageous and unselfish efforts in this sudden emergency undoubtedly prevented further serious injury or possible death to other Americans in the group. Sergeant Denn's outstanding presence of mind and heroic actions are in the most cherished traditions of the United States Army, and reflect distinct credit on himself and the military service.

Staff Sergeant John R. Gorman, , United States Marine Corps, a member of Headquarters, Camp Smedley D. Butler, Okinawa, distinguished himself by heroism on 4 May 1961. When an Army HU-1A Helicopter crashed and burst into flames in the vicinity of Camp Smedley D. Butler, Sergeant Gorman, together with two other members of the United States Marine Corps, proceeded immediately to the scene and commenced rescue operations. Without regard for his own personal safety, and in the face of intense heat and flames, he persisted in his efforts until the successful rescue of Army and Marine personnel trapped in the burning aircraft was accomplished. Handicapped by the lack of both rescue equipment and experience, and working strenuously under the constant threat of an explosion of the fuel tank, his courageous action and outstanding presence of mind undoubtedly saved the lives of the Army pilot and the crew member of the crashed helicopter. Sergeant Gorman's bold and heroic actions in this emergency are worthy of emulation, and reflect the utmost credit on himself and the military service.

Private First Class Michael Gropper, , United States Army, a member of the 25th Transportation Company (Direct Support), Fort Bragg, North Carolina, distinguished himself by heroism while serving as a helicopter repairman during a unit field troop test at Camp MacKall, North Carolina, on 17 March 1961. Upon observing an Army L-20 aircraft crash and burst into flames in a wooded area during an attempted take-off from a field air strip, Private Gropper, together with another fellow soldier, raced immediately to the scene. Unhesitatingly and with complete disregard for his own personal safety, he assisted in removing the dazed co-pilot from the burning airplane, and in carrying him to a safe location. He returned quickly to the blazing wreckage in an effort to extricate the pilot who was pinned inside. Despite the fact that the intensity of the heat and the raging fire prevented his several attempts to enter the plane, he persisted in his efforts until he was ordered away. At an increased risk of his life, he returned to the scene and continued efforts to enter and remove the pilot, and remained until he was again ordered to withdraw. Private Gropper's unselfish heroism in this dangerous situation is in the most cherished traditions of the United States Army, and reflects great credit on himself and the military service.

Master Sergeant Reginald L. Jones. , United States Marine Corps, a member of Headquarters, Camp Smedley D. Butler, Okinawa, distinguished himself by heroism on 4 May 1981. When an Army HU-1A Helicopter crashed and burst into flames in the vicinity of Camp Smedley D. Butler, Sergeant Jones, together with two other members of the United States Marine Corps, proceeded immediately to the scene and commenced rescue operations. Without regard for his own personal safety, and in the face of intense heat and finmes, he persisted in his efforts until the successful rescue of Army and Marine personnel trapped in the burning aircraft was accomplished. Handicapped by the lack of both rescue equipment and experience, and working strenuously under the constant threat of an explosion of the fuel tank, his courageous action and outstanding presence of mind which he displayed undoubtedly saved the lives of the Army pilot and crew member of the crashed helicopter. Sergeant Jones' bold and heroic actions in this emergency are worthy of emulation, and reflect the utmost credit on himself and the military service, Sergeant First Class Watter I. Shermer, United States Army, a member of the 25th Transportation Company (Direct Support), Fort Bragg, North Carolina, distinguished himself by heroism while serving as an aircraft maintenance supervisor during a unit field troop test at Camp MacKall, North Carolina, on 17 March 1961. Upon observing an Army L-20 aircraft crash and burst into flames in a wooded area during an attempted take-off from a field air strip, Sergeant Shermer, together with another fellow soldier, raced immediately to the scene. With complete disregard for his own personal safety, he assisted in removing the dazed co-pilot from the flaming airplane and in carrying him to a safe location. Returning immediately to the burning wreckage, Sergeant Shermer selfiessly risked his life by reaching through the flames in a further attempt to remove the pilot who was pinned inside. Despite the fact that he was ordered away from the blazing wreckage, he courageously returned and persisted in his efforts to extricate the pilot until he was again ordered to leave the aircraft. Sergeant Shermer's unselfish and heroic efforts in this dangerous situation are in the most cherished traditions of the United States Army, and reflect distinct credit on himself and the military service.

Private First Class Willie Watts. , United States Army, a member of Company "C." 2d Medium Tank Battalion (Patton), 40th Armor, distinguished himself by heroism near the village of Changja-Dong, Korea, on 28 January 1961. While participating in the annual Army Training Test. Private Watts was informed that the tank to which he was assigned as loader was on fire. After standard fire fighting procedures were carried out, the flames abated momentarily, and the crew dismounted to determine the extent of the damage. Suddenly the fire reflashed and the tank engine began blazing flercely. Realizing that the immediate danger of an explosion of the fully armed and combat-loaded tank threatened the lives and safety of Infantry troops in the area, Private Watts quickly opened the grill doors, and, using fire extinguishers brought to him by crew members of other tanks, directed a steady stream of carbon dioxide at the source of the fire. With complete disregard for his own personal safety, he refused to leave the tank, despite the fact that the intense heat had melted the soles of his boots. Private Watts persisted in his efforts, and his unswerving determination and courageous actions permitted sufficient time to organize and direct the fire fighting team which brought the blaze under control. The brave and heroic manner in which Private Watts risked his life in this dangerous emergency is in the most cherished traditions of the United States Army, and reflects great credit on himself and the military service.
