Major General Lewis S. Griffing,

United States Army. May 1954

to March 1964.

Major General Orlando C. Troxel, Jr., 1963 to March 1964.

United States Army. April

II_SILVER STAR. By direction of the President, under the provisions of the Act of Congress, approved 25 July 1963, the Silver Star for gallantry in action is awarded, posthumously, to:

Captain Lloyd A. Payne, Infantry, United States Army, distinguished himself by gallantry in action while engaged in military operations in Vietnam on the 14th and 15th of December 1963. As Senior Advisor to a Vietnamese Battalion, Captain Payne rendered invaluable assistance, advice, and encouragement to the Battalion during a military operation. When the Battalion had been subjected to sporadic sniper fire throughout the day, he advised the Battalion Commander to send out several patrols to locate the sniper; and although these efforts diminished the frequency of fire, it started again after the Battalion had closed in for the evening and continued throughout the night. During the entire operation, Captain Payne was at the side of his counterpart advising him in weapons placement, necessary patrol action, and personally checking perimeter security. As the Battalion elements were preparing to move out of their position on the following morning, they sustained heavy sniper fire from the north side of a ridge and, before they could take cover, heavy automatic weapons fire was received from both the north and south ridges. Despite the precarious position, Captain Payne continued to leave his protective cover and bravely moved from position to position offering assurance and advice to the Battalion Commander in coping with the situation. Although he was exposed to this automatic weapons fire, he completely disregarded his own personal safety and continued his advisory efforts until mortally wounded. Captain Payne's conspicuous gallantry and unselfish actions are in the highest traditions of the United States Army and reflect great credit upon himself and the military service.

III_SILVER STAR. By direction of the President, under the provisions of the Act of Congress, approved 25 July 1963, a Silver Star for gallantry in action is awarded to:

Sergeant First Class Eugene Hudson, United States Army. distinguished himself by gallantry in action while engaged in military operations in Vietnam on 22 July 1963. As an Advisor to a Vietnamese Ranger Battalion, Sergeant Hudson rendered invaluable assistance, advice, and encouragement to the 2d Platoon, 1st Company, 33d Ranger Battalion, during an encounter with hostile forces. While the Platoon was maneuvering across an open valley, it was suddenly swept by hostile forces which greatly outnumbered them and received an onslaught of heavy automatic rifle and machinegun fire. Sergeant Hudson then displayed fortitude, professional skill, and determination by occupying an exposed position to assist his counterparts. During the entire operation, he remained cool and calculating, bravely making seven trips under intense gun fire to carry wounded Vietnamese soldiers across a small creek to a covered position. Through his strategy, perserverance, and valorous conduct, he inspired his Vietnamese comrades to emulate his actions, which resulted in a pause in the intensity of hostile gun fire and enabled the Platoon to move to a more advantageous position and continue their operations effectively. Sergeant Hudson's conspicuous gallantry and unselfish actions are in the highest traditions of the United States Army and reflect great credit upon himself and the military service.

Captain Lawrence C. Willoughby, Infantry (then First Lieutenant), United States Army, distinguished himself by gallantry in action while engaged in military operations in Vietnam on 6 July 1963. Captain Willoughby demonstrated fortitude and professional skill as an Advisor to an Army of Vietnam Psychological Warfare Team during a military operation which included a Vietnamese Ranger Company. As these Vietnamese elements approached a narrow, densely wooded mountain trail, they were suddenly ambushed by hostile forces, pinned down by heavy gun fire, and forced to take cover in a shallow ditch. Realizing the high probability of casualties by remaining in this untenable position, Captain Willoughby displayed complete disregard for his own safety, left the protection of the ditch, charged to the strongest point of ambush, and caused the insurgents to withdraw. He then proceeded to the Ranger Company's 60mm mortar and directed operations to rid the area of the fleeing forces. While still under flanking fire, he brought two wounded Vietnamese soldiers to the safety of the ditch. His courageous conduct, unselfish actions, and devotion to duty inspired his Vietnamese comrades to pursue their defense efforts and enabled the unit to successfully complete its mission. Captain Willoughby's conspicuous gallantry is in the highest tradition of the United States Army and reflects great credit upon himself and the military service.

Specialist Four Dennis E. Garcia, United States Army, while serving as a member of the 19th Ordnance Company (Direct Automotive Support), Fort Ord, California, distinguished himself by heroism on 29 September 1963, at Marina Beach, California. When Specialist Garcia heard calls for help from two youths who had been riding an air mattress and were suddenly rendered helpless when caught in a treacherous riptide fifty yards from the beach, he immediately went to their aid. With complete disregard for his own personal safety, he plunged into the surf and, despite the heavy seas, attempted to rescue the young men. After one of the youths succeeded in reaching the shore, Specialist Garcia's efforts to rescue the second youth were in vain as both of them were caught in the strong currents and disappeared beneath the surface. Specialist Garcia's heroic actions and self-sacrifice are in the highest traditions of the military service and reflect distinct credit upon himself and the United States Army.

United States Army, distin-Specialist Five Jack Hansel, guished himself by heroism while serving with Detachment Home Run (Provisional), 39th Engineer Group, on 10 December 1963, in Skopje, Yugoslavia. While operating a grader on a construction site near the Vardar River in Skopje, he was informed that a man had jumped into the water from a railroad bridge to avoid being hit by an onrushing train. Specialist Hansel ran to a point downstream and, with complete disregard for his own personal safety, entered the icy waters to rescue the drowning man. Despite the strong current and weight of his own wearing apparel, he succeeded in reaching the fully clothed Yugoslavian victim and pulling him to the safety of the shore. By his prompt and courageous conduct in the presence of many Yugoslavian citizens, Specialist Hansel materially enhanced the prestige of the United States military forces. His heroic actions in this emergency are in the highest traditions of the United States Army and reflect great credit upon himself and the military service.

Specialist Five Billy H. King, United States Army, as a member of Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 7th Signal Battalion (Service), distinguished himself by heroism on 9 September 1963, at the Regent Park Zoo, London, England. While Specialist King and a fellow soldier were walking across a bridge spanning a canal, they heard the cries of a young boy and saw him pointing to a little boy floundering helplessly in the canal. They ran to the bank of the canal, jumped on a retaining wall extending approximately three feet above the water, and saw the struggling child submerge. With complete disregard for his own personal safety and unaware of the depth or obstacles in the canal, Specialist King leaped fully clothed into the canal to rescue the child. Upon reaching the point where the boy had submerged, he dove beneath the surface, located the child and towed him to the retaining wall where his comrade lifted the boy out of the water. After administering first aid, they carried the child to a nearby aid station for further treatment. Specialist King's prompt and heroic actions are in the highest traditions of the United States Army and reflect great credit upon himself and the military service. (This award supersedes award of the Army Commendation Medal for heroism on 9 September 1963 as announced in General Orders Number 1, Headquarters, United States Army Element, Shape, dated 23 January 1964.)

Moore, Signal Corps, United States Army, distinguished himself by heroism while serving as a member of the 1st Special Forces Group (Airborne), 1st Special Forces, on 16 April 1963, at the Sunabe Quarry, Okinawa, Ryukyu Islands. While driving in the vicinity of the Sunabe Quarry, Captain Moore witnessed the collapse of the sixty foot cinder retaining wall of the quarry. He immediately proceeded to the scene of the accident and, upon observing that Okinawan workmen were trapped in the debris, organized other United States personnel on the scene for rescue operations. With complete disregard for his own personal safety, and ignoring the danger of an explosion from ruptured acetylene gas containers, he entered the quarry pit and evacuated a workman from the rubble moments before a large cement beam fell into the area. He then continued his efforts by assisting in clearing the area of onlookers and searching for other injured workmen. Captain Moore's decisive leadership, sound judgment, and heroic actions in this emergency are in the highest traditions of the United States Army and reflect great credit upon himself and the military service.

Specialist Four Bob A. Tevis, United States Army, while serving as a member of the 19th Ordnance Company (Direct Automotive Support), Fort Ord, California, distinguished himself by heroism on 29 September 1963, at Marina Beach, California. With complete disregard for his own personal safety, he plunged into the surf and, despite the heavy seas, attempted to rescue the young men. After one of the youths succeeded in reaching the shore, Specialist Tevis' efforts to rescue the second young man were in vain as the youth disappeared in the ocean. Specialist Tevis' heroic actions are in the highest traditions of the military service and reflect distinct credit upon himself and the United States Army.
