I_DISTINGUISHED SERVICE CROSS. By direction of the President, under the provisions of the Act of Congress, approved 25 July 1963, the Distinguished Service Cross for extraordinary heroism in action against an enemy is awarded to:

Second Lieutenant Leslie D. Griggs, , Infantry, United States Army, distinguished himself by extraordinary heroism in connection with military operations involving an opposing force in the Republic of Vietnam on 22 February 1965. As the Senior American Advisor to a Strike Force Unit, Lieutenant Griggs was traveling with a convoy when the unit was suddenly ambushed by a vicious Viet Cong force that greatly outnumbered the Strike Force unit as it approached an area six kilometers east of the Mang Yang Pass in Binh Dinh Province. As the hostile element struck them with mortars, machine gun and small arms fire, the members of the Strike Force jumped from their trucks and took cover in a ditch. To direct the fire of the escorting armed helicopters against the concealed Viet Cong, Lieutenant Griggs bravely left his covered position, exposed himself to the onslaught, and was struck in the arm by a grenade which bounced to the ground causing a fragment wound in his leg. Undaunted by his wounds, he proceeded at once to rally the Strike Force to assault the Viet Cong positions. Inspired by his example, the Strike Force pressed forward about twenty meters until Lieutenant Griggs received a severe neck wound and others were wounded, including an American sergeant. Ignoring his profuse bleeding and multiple wounds, Lieutenant Griggs moved through withering small arms fire and exploding grenades to assist his wounded comrade. After administering first aid to the wounded sergeant and pulling him to a protective position beside the road, he quickly annihilated two Viet Cong who were approaching the fallen soldier. Having used all his ammunition, he dropped his rifle, took a Browning automatic rifle from a dead Strike Force soldier, and killed two more Viet Cong who were crossing the road. Then, while attempting to reorganize his forces, he was shot in the back and fell unconscious. When he regained consciousness, the Viet Cong had completely overrun the position and were withdrawing from the ambush site with the Strike Force weapons they had gathered. Despite his critical physical condition, Lieutenant Griggs managed to crawl to a radio which had been hidden from the Viet Cong by the body of the dead operator. Although experiencing extreme difficulty in breathing, he succeeded in directing the fire of the armed helicopters against the withdrawing Viet Cong. When the firing subsided, he guided helicopters into a landing zone to evacuate the wounded and refused aid for himself until the wounded sergeant was placed on board. His indomitable courage, fortitude, and dynamic leadership not only inspired his Vietnamese counterparts but sustained the tide of battle until he fell unconscious from wounds in action. Lieutenant Griggs' conspicuous gallantry, extraordinary heroic actions, and profound concern for his fellow soldiers are in the highest traditions of the United States Army and reflect great credit upon himself and the military service.

VIII_SOLDIER'S MEDAL. By direction of the President, under the provisions of the Act of Congress, approved 2 July 1926, a Soldier's Medal for heroism not involving actual conflict with an enemy is awarded to:

Sergeant First Class Frederick M. Bieger, , Artillery, United States Army, distinguished himself by heroism while participating in a Service Test conducted by the United States Army Artillery Board at Fort Sill, Oklahoma, on 17 August 1965. Sergeant Bieger was standing at the rear of a 105mm Howitzer M102 when it was fired and the projectile malfunctioned, severing the tube of the Howitzer and igniting the additional ammunition on the ground. Although the initial explosion caused the immediate death of two individuals, severe leg injuries to another, and knocked a third person to the ground in a stunned condition, Sergeant Bieger unhesitatingly moved forward to assist in the rescue effort. Despite the extreme hazard, he displayed complete disregard for his own safety, moved past the burning ammunition and another projectile which detonated, and succeeded in evacuating the soldier with the severe leg injury to an area of safety. Sergeant Bieger's heroic conduct, prompt actions, and deep concern for the safety of his fellow soldiers are in the highest traditions of the United States Army and reflect great credit upon himself and the military service.

Brigadier General Jack S. Blocker, , United States Army, while serving as Assistant Division Commander, 3d Infantry Division, distinguished himself by heroism in Germany on the evening of 31 July 1965. Upon observing a young man jump into the Main River near the Gaststaette Old Krane in an apparent suicide attempt, General Blocker displayed complete disregard for his own safety by jumping from a high levee into the river to save the drowning man. Although fully clothed and exposed to a swift current, he managed to reach the struggling victim and hold him above the water. Then, with the assistance of a German policeman who had jumped into the river with a rope, General Blocker succeeded in pulling the victim out of the river. After members of an emergency squad on the scene administered artificial respiration to the young man, he was transported to a local hospital for further treatment. General Blocker's prompt actions, heroic conduct, and deep concern for his fellow man are in the highest traditions of the military service and reflect great credit upon himself and the United States Army.

Captain Glenn P. Carr, , Armor, United States Army, while serving as a member of the 57th Aviation Company, Fort Sill, Oklahoma, distinguished himself by heroism on 24 August 1965, near landing strip number 15 at Fort Sill, Oklahoma. Captain Carr was acting as aviation safety officer for a practice aviation flight demonstration when a participating U6A, Beaver, utility aircraft crashed and burst into flames, trapping the two pilots within the wreckage. Captain Carr immediately rushed one hundred and fifty yards to the scene of the accident to aid the trapped aviators. Then, with complete disregard for his own safety and ignoring the imminent danger of a gasoline explosion and possible smoke asphyxiation, he attempted courageously three times to enter the burning wreckage with a hand extinguisher and to aid the motionless aviators. Although he sustained burns on his right hand, smoke inhalation, and heat exhaustion, he continued his brave efforts until fellow officers arrived on the scene later and escorted him to safety despite his reluctance to leave the flaming wreckage. Captain Carr's heroic conduct, prompt actions, and deep concern for others are in the highest traditions of the United States Army and reflect great credit upon himself and the military service.

Captain Richard D. Clarke, , Infantry, United States Army, as a member of Headquarters and Headquarters Company, Third Infantry Division, distinguished himself by heroism on 1 June 1965 in Wurzburg, Germany. While driving along the banks of the Main River, Captain Clarke heard frantic calls for help coming from the river and then saw a partly submerged vehicle floating in the middle of it. He halted his car, partially disrobed, and with complete disregard for his own safety, jumped into the river and swam toward the floating vehicle that had landed in the water after it had rolled backwards across a parking lot and road. Upon reaching this vehicle, he saw two panicstricken elderly women trying desperately to get out. After calming them down, he succeeded in evacuating the frightened women through the sun-roof of the vehicle with the assistance of a German National participating in the rescue effort. Captain Clarke and the German National then pulled the vehicle to the shore with the assistance of a local fire brigade. Captain Clarke's heroic conduct and prompt actions in this emergency situation are in the highest traditions of the military service and reflect great credit upon himself and the military service. (This award supersedes the award of the Army Commendation Medal awarded to Captain Clarke for heroism on 1 June 1965, as announced in General Orders Number 128, Headquarters, 3d Infantry Division, dated 17 July 1965.)

, United States Army, Private First Class Lowell H. Horton, as a member of Company A, 140th Signal Battalion, Colorado Army National Guard, distinguished himself by heroism on the night of 16 June 1965, in the South Platte River, near Englewood, Colorado. While on guard duty to prevent traffic from crossing the flooded South Platte River via a new bridge and an adjacent older one, Private Horton heard shouts for help from three youths who became trapped in the flood as a surge of water backed up stream. With complete disregard for his own safety, he entered the turbulent waters to assist the boys. As he was waist deep in the water, the older bridge collapsed, swung against the newer one, and surrounded Private Horton and the youths in debris. Despite the obstacles, he succeeded in getting a rope to the three boys who were then pulled out of the river by other Guardsmen on the bank. Although the newer bridge collapsed as he was working his own way to the bank and the swift water washed him down river, he managed to reach a barbed wire fence at the river's edge and to pull himself to safety. Private Horton's heroic conduct, determination, and deep concern for his fellow man are in the highest traditions of the United States Army and reflect great credit upon himself and the military service.

Lieutenant Colonel Charles S. Johnson, Jr., , Armor, United States Army, while serving as a member of the Office of the Chief of Research and Development, Headquarters, Department of the Army, distinguished himself by heroism on 2 November 1965, near the River Entrance of the Pentagon, Washington, D.C. Colonel Johnson was approaching an exit in the Pentagon at approximately 5:15 p.m. when he saw a man with clothing affame. The man had saturated his apparel with an inflammable liquid and ignited it in a suicide attempt. Colonel Johnson immediately ran to the man and, at great personal risk and with complete disregard for his own safety, attempted to put out the fire. Although he sustained burns on his own hands and face, he worked diligently to extinguish the blaze and was then joined by another rescue volunteer. Through their coordinated efforts, which included the use of several coats provided by observers, the fire was extinguished and victim of selfinflicted mortal injury was transported to a nearby dispensary. Colonel Johnson's heroic conduct, prompt actions, and determination in this hazardous situation are in the highest traditions of the United States Army and reflect great credit upon himself and the military service.

Specialist Five David R. Sellers, , United States Army, as a member of Headquarters and Headquarters Company, United States Army Armor Board, Fort Knox, Kentucky, distinguished himself by heroism on 9 May 1965, in Otter Creek, near the Fort Knox Military Reservation. After a swim in the creek with several other persons, Specialist Sellers had left the water to rest a minute when he saw a man climb up a tree adjacent to the stream and dive into it. When the man failed to reappear on the surface of the water within the normal time span, Specialist Sellers unhesitatingly dove into the shallow creek to search for him. With complete disregard for his own safety, he groped on the mud bottom of the creek, located the seriously injured and unconscious victim, and pulled him from the water. He then immediately directed the bystanders to call an ambulance while he himself worked diligently administering artificial respiration until the victim's breathing was restored. Specialist Sellers' heroic conduct and prompt actions, coupled with his initiative and deep concern for his fellow man, are in the highest traditions of the United States Army and reflect great credit upon himself and the military service.

Staff Sergeant Robert W. Shaffer, , United States Army, as a member of Company A, United States Army School, Europe, distinguished himself by heroism on 5 June 1965, in the vicinity of the Gschwand Bridge, Loisach River, Germany. While on a Rod and Gun picnic with other military personnel and their dependents, Sergeant Shaffer heard the screams of alarm from children standing on a footbridge and then saw the nine-year-old son of an American soldier being carried away by the turbulent waters of the floodswollen Loisach River. With full knowledge of the swift current, the extreme depths, and the huge protruding boulders in the cold river, he completely ignored his own safety and jumped into the river in an attempt to recover the child. Although slammed into boulders and driftwood, he fought the treacherous undertow and made a desperate lunge for the drowning boy, missing him by inches as he, himself was swept into a shallow gravel bed where he managed to recover his footing. As he could no longer see the child, he climbed out of the river and ran approximately fifty yards downstream with the intention of jumping back into the river to locate the boy when he collapsed from exhaustion. Then, when partially recovered, he returned to the picnic area and helped organize and conduct a futile search for the missing boy. Sergeant Shaffer's heroic conduct, perseverance, and profound concern for the welfare of others are in the highest traditions of the United States Army and reflect great credit upon himself and the military service.

Specialist Five John H. Smith, (then Private First Class), United States Army, while serving as a member of Company C, 7th Medical Battalion, United States Forces, distinguished himself by heroism on 10 January 1965, in Korea. Specialist Smith unhesitatingly volunteered to participate in a rescue mission when he learned that a fellow soldier had accidentally stepped on a live mine, was seriously wounded, and trapped in the minefield. When the injured man was unable to hold on to a rope extended by an evacuation helicopter hovering over the minefield, Specialist Smith, followed by two soldiers carrying a stretcher, proceeded down a bank of a creek to get as close as possible to the victim. After placing the stretcher on the bank and crawling to the end of it, he was still 6 feet away from the wounded man. Then, with complete disregard for his own safety, he bravely maneuvered himself through the hazardous remaining distance, reached the wounded soldier, and carried him back to the stretcher. With the assistance of other personnel on the scene, he then carried the wounded soldier to the landing site of the evacuation helicopter. Specialist Smith's heroic conduct, ingenuity, and deep concern for a fellow soldier are in the highest traditions of the United States Army and reflect great credit upon himself and the military service. (This award supersedes the award of the Army Commendation Medal to Specialist Smith for meritorious achievement on 10 January 1965 as announced in General Orders Number 20, Headquarters, 7th Infantry Division, APO San Francisco, 96207, dated 17 February 1965.)

, Artillery, United States Second Lieutenant William D. Steck, Army, distinguished himself by heroism while participating in a Service Test conducted by the United States Army Artillery Board at Fort Sill, Oklahoma, on 17 August 1965. Lieutenant Steck was standing at the rear of a 105-mm Howitzer M102 when it was fired and the projectile malfunctioned, severing the tube of the Howitzer and igniting the additional ammunition on the ground. Although the initial explosion caused the immediate death of two individuals, severe leg injuries to another, and knocked a third person to the ground in a stunned condition, Lieutenant Steck unhesitatingly moved forward to assist in the rescue effort. Despite the extreme hazard, he displayed complete disregard for his own safety, moved toward the burning ammunition and another projectile which detonated, and succeeded in pulling a soldier from a position on top of the burning ammunition to an area of safety. Lieutenant Steck's heroic conduct, prompt actions, and deep concern for the safety of his fellow soldiers are in the highest traditions of the United States Army and reflect great credit upon himself and the military service.

IX_BRONZE STAR MEDAL. By direction of the President, under the provisions of Executive Order 11046, 24 August 1962, a Bronze Star Medal with "V" device for heroic achievement in connection with military operations against hostile forces is awarded posthumously to:

Specialist Five James Gabriel, Jr., United States Army, while serving as a member of Operational Detachment A-335, Company C, 1st Special Forces Group (Airborne), 1st Special Forces, distinguished himself by heroic achievement while engaged in military operations against an opposing armed force in the Republic of Vietnam on 7 April and 8 April 1962. As an advisor to a civic action group, Specialist Gabriel was engaged in a training mission with a Vietnamese unit that had been subjected to Viet Cong small arms fire on 7 April 1962. On the following morning as he was negotiating with villagers for the purchase of supplies, an automatic weapon suddenly opened fire into the middle of the area, seriously wounding an American sergeant. Although Specialist Gabriel had succeeded in reaching a covered position during the initial onslaught, he bravely left his position and crawled through the continuous heavy gunfire to radio for assistance. Despite exposure to the intense enemy fire, he remained at the radio and succeeded in making contact with the helicopters before he was seriously wounded and captured by the Viet Cong. Knowing help was on the way, he tried in vain to delay the enemy until the helicopter-borne forces arrived on the scene with assistance. His indomitable courage, determination, and profound concern for his fellow soldiers prevented further casualties and saved the lives of others at the sacrifice of his own. Specialist Gabriel's heroic conduct is in the highest traditions of the United States Army and reflects great credit upon himself and the military service.

Major Byron P. Howlett, Jr., Medical Service Corps, United States Army, as a member of the 421st Medical Company (Air Ambulance), distinguished himself by heroism while participating in aerial flight on 11 February 1965 in Germany. As a pilot of a helicopter, Major Howlett demonstrated unique flying skill, perseverance, and sound judgment in the performance of a dangerous evacuation mission. When notified of the need of an aeromedical evacuation of a seriously injured American soldier from one hospital to another for emergency heart surgery, Major Howlett unhesitatingly volunteered for the mission despite the hazardous weather and poor visibility. Although icing conditions precluded an instrument flight, he efficiently evacuated the patient and successfully completed the mercy mission by flying him from the Army Hospital in Bad Cannstatt to the Army Hospital in Landstuhl, Germany. Major Howlett's outstanding flying ability, deep concern for a fellow soldier, and courageous actions in this emergency reflect distinct credit upon himself and the military service.

Chief Warrant Officer Billy R. Prater, Jr., , United States Army, while serving as a member of Company A, 7th Aviation Battalion, 7th Infantry Division, distinguished himself by heroism while participating in aerial flight in the vicinity of Chorwon, Korea on 1 March 1965. When informed of the need of an aerial operation to recover the body of a hunter from a known but uncharted minefield, Chief Warrant Officer Prater unhesitatingly volunteered as Pilot of an Army CH-21 helicopter for the dangerous mission. With courage, sound judgment, and outstanding flying ability, he skillfully maneuvered the helicopter over a mine infested area while the crew chief and the assistant crew chief hung from the door of the aircraft and attached a rope to the body of the hunter killed by a mine. Although forced to hover the helicopter inches above the ground for over an hour before recovery of the body was finally achieved, he demonstrated determination, fortitude, and professional skill which resulted in the success of the difficult evacuation mission. Chief Warrant Officer Prater's heroism and unique flying ability in this hazardous recovery operation reflect great credit upon himself and the military service. (This award supersedes the award of the Army Commendation Medal for heroism 1 March 1965, as announced in General Orders Number 126, Headquarters, 7th Infantry Division, APO San Francisco, 96207, dated 15 July 1965.)
