On 31 January 1968, elements of the squadron were dispatched from Lai Khe to launch a counterattack against a Viet Cong force that was attempting to overrun the 8th Army of the Republic of Vietnam regimental headquarters in Ben Cat. The squadron attacked and overwhelmed the well-entrenched and heavily fortified enemy, killing 45 Viet Cong and eliminating the threat to the compound. Immediately thereafter, the battle-weary cavalrymen engaged a determined enemy at An My in a vicious 2-day encounter. The badly beaten Viet Cong withdrew in a vain effort to escape the devastating power of the 1st Squadron, 4th Cavalry, but the seasoned troopers ventured deep within the enemy area and inflicted severe casualties on the Viet Cong, thereby blunting the Communist's attempt at a second offensive. Subsequently, the squadron made contact with a battalion-sized Viet Cong unit which was attempting to infiltrate Saigon. After 2 days of bitter ground fighting supported by helicopter gunships, tactical airstrikes and artillery, enemy losses were 340 killed.
